THE CITY

THE SEARCH FOR SEXIEST TORONTO PERSON

All right then, nominations for Sexiest Toronto Person are ... closed.

The final day produced new and interesting options, including a flurry of e-mails furthering the nomination of nutrition entrepreneur Natalie Bean Sole, pictured top.

We had never intended to make this a public vote, but it's hard to ignore a groundswell. Speaking of which, another nomination arrived yesterday for Zoltan Szabo: "I know he has already been nominated ... however, I have to say that I think Zoltan Szabo — the wine guy — is the "sexiest" person in the city!

"He is just so hot to look at and he has the best body that I have seen in Toronto with the most sexiest smile and face! That is it in a nutshell — plus his accent and voice are sexy, and he is a good person who will do anything for you."

But here's where it gets kind of fun — that latest Szabo nomination came from publicist Danielle Iversen, pictured bottom — who has herself been nominated.

Helen Hatzis of The Jewish Magazine writes: "Dear committee, I would like to nominate Toronto PR president of that PR thing Danielle Iversen because she possesses a lovely warm, outgoing and charismatic personality. It is infectious! So much so that in August, 2006, we featured her on the cover of our magazine — the first gentile!

"Our office received a ton of flattering calls and e-mails from our readership (mostly men). She has Shiksappeal (remember the old Seinfeld episode?). Well, it was our most successful issue of 2006. Flash forward to February, 2007, we have created a column for Danielle called Shiksa in the City. It is a monthly column with her first instalment called You had me at Shalom.

"She exudes sex appeal!"

The City will name the winner next week, probably.
